

Porn Nazis

After the Nazis invaded a country one of their first acts was to spread pornography. They knew there was nothing better for them than most of the captured country's men jerking off at home. It worked in every country except France (French men were already preoccupied.) When the nation elected a new President, a millionaire whose background was often in failed real estate projects and bankrupt casinos, he followed through with his campaign promises: deporting aliens illegal and legal, eliminating science research and healthcare benefits, ending green projects and more—but he did not outlaw porn. He railed against electric cars and vaccines, indeed. But porn? Not a word.

Some citizens wondered but no one asked. Porn was never discussed in polite society, after all. It was consumed by polite society but never discussed. As a result, no one knew the new President's nouveau fortune came not from his bankrupt casinos and real estate projects but a vast network of porn sites. Everyone did know about his gold toilets (but not about the gold rubber bed sheets and mirrors.)

Yes, porn objectified and debased women—the new President was okay with that. Early on he bragged about grabbing women by their genitals and the size of his penis, but he stopped that talk once elected—he did not want anyone associating him with sex, it might out his secret. True enough, looking at him, no one ever associated him with sex.

Power and money drove the new President. He soon injected politics into his porn empire. Women became bustier, with tighter clothes and longer hair, always submitting. Men were shown in all shapes and sizes, using women. The new President reshaped society into one he preferred: where more people watched more porn.

Already the largest consumer of porn in the world, the nation devoured even more. The new President had laws passed, limiting the work available to women—unless they had long hair and large breasts and pretty faces. Eventually the nation's productivity crashed through the basement and into the earth's bowels. Most everyone was obsessed with sex (the men, anyway) and living unsatisfying lives (the women, anyway.)

The nation finally went bankrupt. It and its citizens were purchased by other nations and turned into a gigantic brothel for tourists. The new President? Ever wealthier, he took his cut and retired to his mansion on Epstein Island.